

Mike Minter

Mike Minter was a pillar of the Carolina Panther defense since joining the team in 1997. Known as one of the most consistent performers in professional football, Mike is a rare breed having spent his entire career with one organization. He has seen the highs of playing in the Super Bowl and the lows of a team that won but one game in a 16 game season.

An all-pro safety, Mike Minter officially retired from the Panthers after the 2006 season. He left the game as the Panthers' all-time leading tackler. He also recorded nine fumble recoveries and four interceptions returned for touchdowns. But for Minter, there is life after football.

Mike has been called a true Renaissance man. His successes as a businessman and philanthropist rival his fame on the field. His humble demeanor and desire to give back to the community places Mike in a category of his own. His impact on fellow athletes has been enormous. His impact on his community may be even greater.

Minter has spent time coaching football teams at Liberty University, Johnson C. Smith University and most recently at Campbell University.

As a motivational speaker, Mike's insights are unique, his delivery impeccable, his credentials unparalleled. He makes his listeners laugh, he makes them think and, above all, he encourages them to become everything that they are intended for them.
